out to get capital.

After dreadful privations they catch the boat at Kadlak and are soon en route for Chicago. Emerson seeks Miss Mildred Wayland.

(Cintinued From Yesterday.)

On that very night, in a little snow smothered cabin crouching close against the Kalvik binffs, another girl was seated at a plano. Her slim, white fingers had strayed upon the notes of a song which Boyd Emerson had sung. In her dream filled eyes was the picture of a rough garbed, silent man at her shoulder, and in her ears was the sound of his voice. Clear to the last melting note she played the air, and then a pitiful sob shook her. She bowed her golden head and hid her face in her arms, for a memory was upon her, a forgotten kiss was hot upon her lips, and she was very lonely.

At the hotel Emerson found Clyde and Fraser in Balt's room awaiting They were noisy and excited at the success of the enterprise and at the prospect of immediate action.

Boyd told them little of the news that had startled him earlier in the evening beyond the bare fact that Marsh had floated a packers' trust and that secrecy for the present was now doubly necessary to the success of their undertaking. The full significance of the merger, therefore, did not strike his associates, even when on the train the next day they read the annonncement of its formation in the newspapers. Balt alone took notice of it and fell into a furious rage at his enemy's success.

No sooner were they fairly under way for the west than Emerson began the definite shaping of his plans. He and George carefully went over the and sent many messages, with the re | shall contract for the entire catch at a Without loss of time Boyd installed himself and his friends at a hetel, secured a competent and close mouthed stenographer, and then sought out the banker with whom he had made a tentative agreement before going to Chicago. Mr. Hilliard greeted him cordially.

"I see you have carried out your part of the program," said be, "but before we definitely commit ourselves we should like to know what effect this new trust is going to have on the canning business."

"You mean the N. A. P. A.?" "Precisely. Our Chicago correspondent can't tell us any more than we have learned from the press-namely. that a combination has been formed. We are naturally somewhat cautious about financing a competitive plant until we know what policy the trust will pursue."

Here was exactly the complication Boyd had feared; therefore it was with some trepidation that he argued:

"The trust is in business for the money, and its very formation ought to be conclusive evidence of your good judg-However, you have backed so many plants such as mine that you know as well as I do the big profits to be taken."

"That isn't the point. Ordinarily we would not waver an instant, but the Wayland-Marsh outfit is apt to upset conditions. If we only knew"-

"I know," boldly declared Boyd. "Mr. Wayland outlined his policy to me before the public knew anything about the trust." "Indeed? Are you acquainted with

"Not much; the country is new. There is a-woman at Kalvik who has ome men out prospecting."

"Cherry Malotte?" "Do you know her?" asked Boyd with astonishment.

"Very well indeed." Then, noting Boyd's evident curlosity, he went on, "You see, I have made a number of mining investments in the north. My operations have turned out so well that I keep several men just to follow new strikes.

"Has Miss Malotte made a strike?" "Not exactly, but she has uncovered some promising copper prospects." "H'm! That is news to me"

Three weeks passed quickly in strenuous effort, and then one morning the partners awoke to the realization that there was little more for them to do.

Through it all Clyde had lent them enthusiastic if feeble assistance, and now that the strain was off he gave fitting expession to his delight by getting drunk. Being temperamental to a degree, he craved company, and, knowing full well the opposition he would encounter from his friends, he annexed a bibulous following of loafers whose time hung heavy and who were at all times eager to applaud a loose tongue so long as it was accompanied by a loose purse. Toward midnight "Fingerless" Fraser, cruising in a nocturnal search for adventure and profit, found him in a semimandlin state, descanting vaporously to his train, and upon catching mention of the Kalvik fisheries snatched him "Ah, I congratulate you. Perhaps homeward and put him to bed, after which he locked him into his room, threw the key over the transom and stood guard outside until assured that

When the constitution of the United States was adopted, after which most of the state constitutions are copied, a of unspeakable vices to an extent unrepresentative government was the searest to a popular form of law making that was feasible at that time. Neither the initiative nor referendum would have been practical on account of the crude methods of transportation, So, it is the merest nonsense to point to the wisdom of our ancestors as an argument against improved methods in government Experience has taught us that men whom we think honest, may have a different standard of honesty from urs; and when placed in office may do things against the interests of those whom they are elected to serve, and de-

The Germans are known all over the world as the greatest travelers, next to stay at the best hotels and in everything except tipping they are almost as reckless as the Yankee abroad. Berliners Most Extravagant, These habits of prodigal extravagance are most in evidence in Berlin, but ber it must be remembered that Berain is microcosm of modern Germany and that the Berliners are only leading the proession in which all their fellow Ger mans follow. The Berliners themselves are not alarmed—they are quite happy and contented and are ambitious t make their city the capital of the world's galety and thus complete the conquest of France which they began forty years ago. It is this tendency in tire social life of the German people which is responsible more than any othler one thing for the willingness of the constitutional convention. I also fail to see wherein anyone could accuse you of partiality to any faction in so doing, where were so many Germans there.
